

AED (Automatic External Defibrillator)

The University has a number of AEDs on our campuses should CPR be required.

An automated external defibrillator (AED) is a portable and easy-to-operate medical device that analyses an unconscious victim's heart rhythm and automatically delivers an electric shock if they are having a sudden cardiac arrest (SCA).

An AED will not deliver a shock unless its built in computer detects a shockable heart rhythm.

AEDs are provided for use by CSU and CSU- affiliated first aid trained personnel to assist in the resuscitation of staff, students, contractors and visitors as necessary.

Anyone can use these devices by following the instructions- in the first instance by opening the lid of the AED and pushing it back till it locks and follow the voice and text prompts.

Please call 000 in the event of a SCA or any other emergency.

All uses of the AEDs must be reported to CSU Work Safety and Health Unit via a SCRIM online report.

The device carries out a self-test on a daily basis, and should there be any issues with the unit, it will bleep to advise you it needs checking. The AED will either tell you that the pads need changing, due to being close to expiry, or that the batteries need changing. If you identify any faults with the product please alert the Work Health and Safety Unit at ohs@csu.edu.au
