Stay up to date with how the Coronavirus may affect your accommodation and study

Hi (first name),

Charles Sturt University is actively monitoring all developments regarding the coronavirus (COVID-19) and its potential spread.

We are aware of media reporting on the potential closure of Charles Sturt University campuses to minimise the spread of coronavirus among students.

Charles Sturt has no immediate safety concerns or plans to close any campuses.

If this changes, we will be in contact with you.

The University has its Infectious Disease Outbreak Management Plan in place which will guide the actions Charles Sturt will take depending on the severity and escalation of the coronavirus outbreak.

How to look after your health

If you are feeling unwell or concerned about your health, contact your local health professionals. Please ring the GPs office or hospital before you intend to arrive as they may wish to question you on recent travel.

If you develop symptoms or are in close contact with someone who does, contact the Reslife team immediately. Please also advise the Reslife team if you have been in close contact with other Charles Sturt Students.

We advise avoiding all travel to the Hubei Province in China, Iran, Korea and other areas where large outbreaks have been recorded.

Frequently washing your hands and avoiding close contact with anyone who has a fever and cough are just some of the ways you can look after yourself. Make sure to familiarise yourself with the World Health Organisation’s clean hands protect against infection instructions.
Where to find support

Support is offered to students concerned about family and friends who have been impacted and students who are currently experiencing limitations on travel.

If you have been directly affected, please contact the Student Central team as special consideration and assistance is available.
